Gods come to play, where women are worshipped. Manu shows the position of women in ancient India. In most modern countries, women occupy an honorable place in society. They enjoy a position equal to man. But in our country, the position of women is not satisfactory. The vast majority are steeped in superstition and ignorance. Fortunately, there are signs of improvement. The government is taking keen interest in their education and special facilities have been provided for them. The country requires trained doctors and nurses on a large scale. Women are well fitted for this profession. Similarly, when primary education has become almost universal, there is a great demand for teachers. Here too women are required to fill the gap. Women will be employed during nursery and primary stages. Women definitely make good teachers for children. When all is said and gone, great care should be taken so that her place in the home may not be damaged and weakened. It is there where she will always reign supreme. A few women may take part in political and public affairs but others will find peace and contentment in a happy home. Remember - the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world.
